WHEN THE SERENISSIMA AND THE GRAN TURCO MADE LOVE:
THE PEACE TREATY OF 1478*

Diana Gilliland Wright · Pierre A. MacKay

Although a transcription of the 1478 Venetian-Ottoman peace treaty or ‘ahl-name was published by Franz Miklosich and Joseph Müller in 1865, there has been no scholarly edition or English translation of this intriguing text. Miklosich and Müller apparently did not appreciate the forms and spelling of the ‘ahl-name – often difficult to understand – and published a ‘correct’ version with classicized verbs. While this does not interfere with the content and meaning of the ‘ahl-name, it does affect a perception of the document within its culture and as an example of the development of the Greek vernacular, and there is no accompanying commentary or contextual explanation. In contrast, numerous other Venetian-Ottoman documents and treaties have been published with transcriptions and commentaries. Two groups in particular should be noticed: the treaties directly preceding the 1478 treaty – that of 1446 published by Franz Babinger and Franz Dölger, and that of 1454 published by Samuele Romanin; and the subsequent treaties of 1482 through 1641, published by Hans Theunissen. Given the lack of attention to this 1478 treaty, it seems appropriate to make available a more accurate reading of the Greek text, along with a translation and brief commentary.

'Make love' is the literal translation of the Greek term used for 'make peace', which is what the 'ahd-name' says, in its inimitable spelling: πέισαι νέαν ἁγάπην. This is also how various Greek chronicles recorded the event: «ἐξακούσαν ἁγάπην οἱ Βενετίκοι μὲ τὸν ἄμεραν ... ἐπόλισαν ὁμολογούσα κόθεντος ἁγάπην μὲ τους Βενετίκους ... ἐξακούσαν ἁγάπην ὁ σουλτάνος Μεμέτης μὲ τους Βενετζάνους ... ἐξακούσαν ἁγάπην μὲ τους Βενετίκους ... Τότε οἱ Βενετζάνοι ἐκάμασαν ἁγάπην μὲ τὸν σουλτάνο». The relationship was consummated when on 25 January 1478/1479, Mehmed II issued an 'ahd-name' to the Venetian emissary, Giovanni Dario, stipulating the terms of the peace that would conclude the 1463-1478 war.

As soon as word of the 'ahd-name' reached Venice, even before the document itself arrived, provveditori in the stato da mar were directed to begin to comply with its provisions. Subsequently, an emissary from Mehmed accompanied Giovanni Dario from Constantinople to Venice to request formal confirmation by the Signoria.

5 As early as 1466, Venice had made overtures toward peace, sending «Davit Ebreo», who received a «dura risposta» (M. Sanudo, Diarii. reprint, Bologna, 1969. iv, 324). Giovanni Dario's name is prominently mentioned in the 'ahd-name': the Senato gives him credit for settling its provisions. asse: Secreto, Senato R. 28, f. 148v: «conclusione pacis facte cum fidelissimum secretarium nostum Ioannes Darium». Dario first went to Constantinople in 1450, as translator for the ambassador to Constantine XI, and participated in a peace mission to Constantinople as early as 1471. Late in the war he accompanied two different ambassadors on further missions. For Dario see the excellent account by M. F. Tiepolo, in Greci nella cancelleria veneziana: Giovanni Dario, Atti del Convegno internazionale di Studio I Greci à Venezia, Venezia, 5-7 nov. 1998, Venice, 2002, 257-314. For contemporary reporting, see M. Sanudo, Le Vite dei Dogi, 1474-1494, Padua, 1989, vol. 1, 10, 104, passim. Theunissen, 128-131 gives an overview of diplomatic efforts.

6 The Senato knew about the 'ahd-name' by 21 Feb.: asse: Senato Mar R. 11, f. 13 for 22 Feb.: reports that Michele Salomon in Albania had heard from Giovanni Dario. On 25 February, the Senato sent letters to officials of the stato da mar and the fleet to begin transferring territories «per nos aquisita et occupata» and to do everything to ensure that they could «tranquillus vivere et vicinare sagittis et subditis eiusdem domini» (asse: Secreto, Senato R. 28, f. 150 for 25 Feb. 1478/1479). Sanudo, Le Vite, vol. 1, 145-147 gives a copy of the proclamation of the peace in Venice, 25 April 1479, after the arrival of Lutfi-Bey, emissary from Mehmed to confirm the peace, and a description of his visit.

7 Asse: Secreto, Senato R. 29 ff. 14v-15 for 4 May 1479. The emissary was Kahya Lutfi Beg. See Miklosich, Müller, iii, 298, letter of introduction from Mehmed of 29 January subsequent correspondence between Doge and Sultan covered additional provisions\(^8\) which had been negotiated at various levels for several years: these details were then quite literally worked out on the ground during the following years.\(^9\)

Under the Ottoman system, ‘ahd-names were issued as unilateral documents, whatever the extent of the preceding negotiation or degree of harmony between the parties.\(^10\) The initial provisions of the 1478 ‘ahd-name repeat almost word for word similar provisions from the 1446, and 1454 treaties: the parties are equals, Mehmed takes the initiative to protect Venetian interests, and Venice promises reciprocal courtesies. Mutual security of ships, merchants and merchandise is assured, compensation for damages and punishment for piracy and banditry promised. The rights and protections of the Venetian bailo and community in Istanbul are guaranteed according to custom, although there was no similar Turkish community in Venice for another hundred years.\(^11\)

Here, the mutuality of the ‘ahd-name shifts and a series of Venetian obligations are listed as conditions for peace: a flat tax of 10,000 ducats a year for trading privileges, a payment of 100,000 ducats within two \(^8\) All surviving (Greek) correspondence from Mehmed II to Doge Giovanni Mocenigo has been published. Six of these letters are in Miklosich, Müller, iii, 293-309. Another thirteen, with Italian translations, were published by A. Bombaci, Nuovi firmani greci di Maometto II, «bz», 47, 1954 298-319. Apparently none of the letters from the Doge to Mehmed has survived. In his discussion of the treaty, Babinger confusingly includes details from the collateral correspondence not in the ‘ahd-name. F. Babinger, Mehmed the Conqueror and His Time, transl. R. Manheim. Princeton (nj), 1978, 369. The final statement of agreement was issued by Mehmed on April (31) 1481. ASVE: Documenti Turchi, B i/2; Miklosich, Müller, iii, 306-309. Mehmed died immediately after, on 3 May, which meant all details had to be re-negotiated under Bayezid II who issued his ‘ahd-name on the peace on 12 January 1481/2. Bayezid’s correspondence on the 12 January 1481/2 ‘ahd-name and peace is in Miklosich, Müller, iii, 309-317. The Turkish text is published in Theunissen, 370 ff.

\(^{10}\) Diplomatic envoys were sent to Venice as the occasion required, where they were often housed in the house that had formerly belonged to Giovanni Dario. Sanudo, Diarii, xx, 543, 540, for Aug. 1515; xxii, 455, for Aug. 1516; and xxiii, 361 for Dec. 1517.
years for past debts, Lemnos and Skodar to be handed over. In the concluding provisions of the ‘ahd-name the parties again appear as equals: both sides will return territories taken in the war and the boundaries in the Morea are to return to their pre-war state. That Argos was not returned reflects the fact that it was taken in April 1463, before war was formally declared at midnight on 28 July. Negroponte was not returned, nor even discussed: its capture was a specific act of vengeance on the part of Mehmed II for Nicolo da Canale’s sack of Ainos. Although the return of Mani to the Ottomans eventually triggered a major revolt, Mani had not belonged to Venice before the war. The Ottoman military position was at this point strong enough that there was no clear compulsion for them to negotiate at all where Greece and the islands were concerned. This comes across clearly in the Liber Graecus Italian translation where pointing hands and «per volo domini» mark particular passages. It comes across even more clearly in provision requiring a «gift» to the landholder: Venice was under no illusions that she kept her Greek territories by other than Mehmed’s goodwill.

12 The inability to take Skodar/Scutari with two long sieges had been a humiliation to Mehmed. Sanudo seems to record Venetian opinion when he says that it was this frustration that led Mehmed to want peace: Sanudo, Le Vite, vol. 1, 124-125, 133, 134-135, 136.
15 See D. G. Wright, Bartolomeo Minio: Venetian Administration in 15th Century Nauplion, Ph.D. Diss., The Catholic University of America, 1999, ch. 4 for a discussion of the Kladas revolt of October 1480 which was triggered by the handover of Mani.
16 One motivation behind Mehmed’s consent to peace at this point – after rejecting an almost identical arrangement a year earlier – was his need for Skoutari and his interest in Venetian non-interference with the planned assault on Otranto. He had, in fact, Venetian ships to ferry troops across the Adriatic in the summer of 1480 for the attack (Setton, 339-342; Sanudo, Le Vite, vol. 1, 135; Zoras, 119 for Skoutari: «καὶ τὸ κάστρο ἔκλειν τὸ ἐπερίπλαθε ὁ Τούρκος, διατὶ ἦν καλὸν λεμέσων διὰ τὴν ἀρμάδα του, καὶ διὰ νὰ φέρη τὰ φυσιστάτα τοῦ στερέας νὰ τὰ περάσῃ ἐν τὴν Ἡλλάδα»: «The Turk took over that fortress because it had a good harbor for the fleet, for bringing the land troops to ferry them to Apulia». The Ottoman fleet was withdrawn by Bayazid on 10 July 1481.
17 These marginal comments (in italics here) and pointing hands are included in the English translation below of the ‘ahd-name. The Liber Graecus contains the Greek transcription and Italian translation used as working copies by clerks for the Signoria (asve: Misc. Atti Diplomati et Privati, B45, Liber Graecus 1321/1 & 2).

The ‘ahd-name is written on a large scroll of Venetian-made paper, sized to provide the glossy surface alla turchesca. Just above the mid-line fold, on the right, the paper bears the watermark of a crowned eagle facing left. A second, smaller sheet of paper bearing the gold tugra of Mehmed II, is glued to the ‘ahd-name immediately above the text. This smaller paper has the common scissors watermark.19

Julian Raby, in a study that emphasizes the literary and calligraphic quality of the Greek writers encouraged by Mehmed II in the earlier decades of his reign, can find nothing good to say about the authors and scribes of chancellery documents in the last decade. One of the first impressions, certainly, that arises from a reading of the 1478 treaty is that it depends on a purely oral understanding of the written language. But Raby goes on to say that, «the sultan grew ever more reliant on renegades and racial hybrids».20 The competence in Greek needed by the chancellery was probably provided by captives or by children from the devshirme identified early as having a needed talent. Their ear for Greek would then be fully developed, as we see reflected in the text of this treaty, but their access to the traditional literate culture of Greek would be almost entirely cut off.

The formulae of the treaty, however, require some sort of literate agency. Someone was able to read in Greek from older treaties the conventional clauses that are repeated here.21 There are also distinctive 19 The watermarks are visible in a photograph of the ‘ahd-name: J. Raby, Mehmed the Conqueror’s Greek Scriptorium, «dop», 37, 1983, fig. 21; J, K and M shows similar watermarks from Raby’s identifications of documents from Mehmed’s scriptorium, but not that of the ‘ahd-name. The eagle is of the type in pls. 170-173 of E. Heaward, Watermarks, Mainly of the 17th and 18th Centuries, Hilversum (NL), 1950.

20 Raby, 28. The latter term is unfortunate but, more than that, it suggests two possibilities – both unlikely. A Greek might convert to Islam in order to marry a Muslim wife – many did throughout the Ottoman centuries, notably in Crete – but then the maternal language of their offspring would be non-Greek and the opportunity to become fluent in Greek would be limited by the hostility of the Greek millet. In the opposite case surely the ambitions of the non-Greek father would be likely to prejudice a son against involvement with a subordinate dhimmi culture. In either case, the child would be irrecoverably cut off from the literate tradition supported by the millet.

21 The 1446 treaty studied in Babinger-Dölger, although it contains many of the substantive provisions repeated in this treaty, does not include the kind of literary phrase discussed here. It is also noteworthy that the scribe of 1446 had an entirely different approach to many of the phonetic characteristics of the language. Rather than eliminate double consonants, for example, he puts in several where they are not needed, and his choice of epsilon against alpha-iota is far closer to literary orthography, than that found in the 1478 treaty.
literary echoes in the Greek that can hardly have come from a spontaneous translation of a Turkish or Latin original.

1. In line 8, «παλαία τε καὶ νέα», is a formula occasionally found in Late Roman and Byzantine Greek, and several times in Nicephorus Gregoras, Historia Romana. Compare πλεῖστον τε καὶ ὁλίγον in line 3, which is accented very strangely («πληγῶν τε καὶ ὁλίγων»).

2. The indefinite «εἷς τι ἄρα καὶ» (lines 38 and 44) appears first in Eusebius, and, much closer to the time of this treaty in a vivid sentence in Sphrantzes, «Διὰ μέσου οὖν, εἷς τι ἄρα καὶ εὑρίσκων τῶν θηλίων Ἦμωμαίον, ἀλλὰ δὴ καὶ τῶν Ἀλβανιτῶν συγγενῶν πολλὰς τῶν οἰκείων αὐτῶν, πάντα δυστάξαντο καὶ ἥρανζον».22

3. The two phrases, «συμπαθημένοι εἰς δτι ἐγείνε», (line 42) and «συμπαθημένοι ἀπὸ πάσαν αὐτίκαν εἰς δτι ἐγείνε» (line 46) are more difficult since they are not otherwise attested and they echo a common phrase αὐτίκα εἰς τνα, where the grammatical object of εἰς is the agent responsible and not the target of whatever αὐτίκα is adduced. Here it seems to mean, «in whatever context it [a crime or other offence] occurred».

Phrases 1 and 2 at least, along with other passages in the treaty, argue the existence of an earlier and probably more literate text from which the composer of this treaty could draw.23 The scribe, however, appears not to have had a written original but to have written from dictation. He wrote what he heard, and what he heard conformed very closely to the sound of Greek we should expect in the late 15th century. His rendering is orthographically erratic but appears phonetically sound, apparently even when he records the genitive of θάλασσα as «θαλάσσω» (line 10).

He wrote swiftly and confidently. The angular style of most of his characters bears little resemblance to contemporary Greek hands as exemplified in Raby’s article. He had a small repertory of ligatures: the ubiquitous ω, which he does not employ consistently, is written as a sort of swash ‘V’ shape, with a very small loop for the omicron; ην in the middle of words like αὐθεντίκα and αζ as the genitive ending 22 Chronicon Minus, 39, 8, ll. 12-14: «Everywhere, if they found anything belonging to the hapless Greeks or, for that matter, to the Albanians, their own people, and sometimes even their own kinsmen, they looted it and carried it off».

23 See notes to translation.
are regularly ligatured. It is difficult to be certain whether the ας ligature is intended to imply the accent on the preceding iota, so it has been omitted in the transcription in most instances. The combination of breathing and accent is often spaced out to such a degree that it is difficult to know whether the two diacriticals are really intended for the same letter. As noted below, there are places where he seems to use a breathing on one vowel and an accent on the next to indicate that the pair of vowels represents two distinct syllables. He made wide use of a narrow u-shaped diacritical which sometimes seems to be intended for a breathing, but at other times might be thought of as a slurred dieresis.

As noted above, the text appears to have been written from dictation, the scribe spelling by ear beyond the conventional substitution of eta and omega, and creating at first impression so many apparent idiosyncratic spellings, accents and word divisions that it is frequently easier to understand by reading aloud. An examination of certain elements of the orthography demonstrates less idiosyncracy and more rationality than does the first impression:

3. He writes double consonants as single: «σμάγχους», «θάλασσα», «γαγραμένα» for σωμάγκους, θάλασσα, γεγραμένα. He applies this same economy at the ends of words, as in «θελήσαν απηγανου νά» (line 41).
4. The various iotacized vowel sounds are represented most often by -η-, but almost all the other possibilities can be found.
5. -τ- is assimilated to -μπ- after -ν- («τήν μπήστην», line 3).

The scribe (also probably Greek) responsible for the Liber Graecus Greek copy of the ‘ahd-name made extensive corrections to the text.
7. He uses both dieresis\(^{25}\) and breathing to indicate the separate pronunciation of two successive vowels: as «μπεῖς», «μπαίλος», «τώπι ἴναι» (for τόποι εἶναι) and «ποίησομ(εν)», «κυθήν», «βαδεύσην», «βοήθην» and «χρησήρην».

The transcription that follows is a diplomatic edition with transcription as close to the original as possible, with no corrections or regularization for spelling, accents, or punctuation, and no addition of capital letters. The line breaks in the manuscript are indicated and abbreviations have been expanded. It is followed by an English translation and notes.

\(^{25}\) The dieresis seems to have become something of a convention in Mehmet’s scriptorium to indicate an otherwise unaccented -i-, simply dotting an -i-. See, Raby, figs. 34, 36, 38, 40, 41.

\(^{26}\) In the first line, the diacritics over ως are difficult to interpret, and there seems to have been an erasure over the omega.
Mehmed II confirms peace between the Ottomans and Venice.

[Gold tugra of Mehmed II]

On 25 January 1478/1479, Mehmed II, the Ottoman Sultan, confirmed the peace treaty with Venice. The treaty was signed in Istanbul, and the peace was sealed with a gold tugra, a type of seal used by the Ottomans. The treaty was a significant moment in the history of the empire, as it marked the end of a long period of conflict with Venice. The treaty was signed in the presence of astrologers, who predicted that it would bring peace and prosperity to the empire. The treaty was a testament to the power and influence of the Ottoman Empire. The gold tugra was a symbol of the empire's wealth and power. 28 The numbers for the date are written much larger than the text. At the conclusion of the LG Greek copy, LG 1321/1, a second scribe has noted: «Capitula pacis cum domino turco Mehemet Bey- orarre egregio & prestantissimo secretario Ioanni Dario».
I, the great lord and great emir, Sultan Mehemed-Bey, son of the great and blessed lord Murat-Bey, do swear by the God of heaven and earth, and by our great prophet Mohammed, and by the seven mushaf which we Moslems possess and confess, and by the 124 thousand prophets of God (more or less), and by the faith which I believe and confess, and by my soul and by the soul of my father, and by the sword I wear.

Because my Lordship formerly had peace and friendship with the most illustrious and exalted Signoria of Venice, now again we desire to make a new peace and oath to confirm a true friendship and a new peace. For this purpose, the aforementioned illustrious Signoria sent the learned and wise kyrios Giovanni Dario, secretary, as emissary to my Lordship so we might make the said peace with the following old and new provisions. For this my Lordship swears by the above-written oaths that just as there was formerly peace and friendship between us, namely, with their lords and men and allies, I now profess good faith and an open peace by land and sea, within and without the Straits, with the villages, fortresses, islands, and lands that raise the sign of San Marco, and to those desiring to be from this time forward, per Cypro all those places that are in their obedience and supervision, and 39 LG 1321/2 (Italian) is headed: Pax cum Domino Mahamet Imperator Turcorum 1478. Marginal comments from that manuscript will be included in italics in the text with the accompanying Theunissen, 90-96, discusses the elements of the ‘ahd-name conventional to Ottoman treaties. These elements, whose order can vary, are: invocatio or the name of God; names and titles of the parties; capitula or clauses; oath in extenso containing the prophets, Mohammed, and the seven mushaf; corroboratio, here the final confirmation; legitimatio, or tugra. LG 1321/2 adds «dela bon memoria».

40 The seven mushaf were the seven accepted versions of the Quran: this emphasized Mehmed’s Sunni allegiance.

41 Miklosich, Müller, III 296 read this number as 124.

42 The phrase «more or less» does not appear in Turkish versions of the ‘ahd-name (personal communication from Hans Theunissen). The Italian of LG 1321/2, and of the Ottoman-Venetian treaty of 1454, has «o più o meno» (Romanin, IV, 383).

43 In the 1446 treaty, when Sultan Murad was alive, Mehmed swore «by my head and the head of my father» (Babinger, Dölger, 239).

44 This section is contained in the 1454 treaty (Romanin, IV, 383).

45 LG 1321/2, «homine». Kyrios can be translated either as ‘sir’ or ‘lord’. Apparently Dario, a cittadino, could not be called a ‘lord’ in a Venetian document. «et tuor dal Sig. [Confirmation of previous agreements]

[1] First, no man of my lordship will dare to inflict injury or opposition to the Signoria of Venice or its men: if this happens, my Lordship is obligated to punish them according to the cause: similarly, the most illustrious Signoria is obligated toward us.

[2] Further, from this day forwards, if either land or other goods of the most illustrious Signoria and its men is taken by the men of my Lordship, it will be returned: similarly, they are obligated to my Lordship.

[3] Their men and their merchandise may come by land and by sea to every land of my Lordship, and all the merchandise and the galleys and the ships will be secure and at ease: similarly, they are obligated toward us in their lands.

[4] Similarly, the Duke of Naxos and his brothers and their lords and men with their ships and other boats are in the peace. They will not owe my Lordship any service, but the Venetians will hold them just as all used to be.

[5] Further, all ships and galleys, that is merchantmen and the fleet of my Lordship, wherever they may encounter the Venetians, will have good relattions and peace with them.\textsuperscript{53} Corsairs and kleps, wherever they are taken, will be punished.\textsuperscript{54}

\textsuperscript{7} If any Venetian slave flees and comes into Turkish hands and becomes a Moslem, they will give his master 1000 aspers;\textsuperscript{56} if he is a Christian he will be sent back.\textsuperscript{57}

\textsuperscript{54} Bombaci, Nuovi firmari, 303, for 23 Sept. 1479: «perè tòw ζημην, ὅπως ἐποίησαν οἱ φοίτητες τοῦ Αὔλου μέσα eíc τὸν Κάλλον σας, ἀφίησαν τὸν Ἀχμάτ μπασιᾶν ὅτι να ἱκανοποίηση τούς ἀνθρώπους σας, ὡς μίαν τρίχην. καὶ πλέον να μηθέν ἔχουσα ἄδειον τὰ κουρσάρια να σεβαίνουν εἰς τὸν Κάλλον σας. εἶ δὲ καὶ σεβαίνοντε να παρέξεινται ὅπου παρεβάζονται: About the damages inflicted by our fuste from Valona in your Gulf, we direct Ahmed (Gedik) Paşa to indemnify your people in full. Moreover, the corsairs have no permission to enter your Gulf, and if they do enter they are to be punished when captured.»

\textsuperscript{56} One thousand aspers was then equal to about 22 ducats, a reasonable, if modest, price for a slave: H. Inalcik, Servile Labor in the Ottoman Empire, in Studies in Ottoman Social and Economic History, London, 1985, vii, 43-44. In 1479 so many men were captured in the Ottoman assault on the Ionian islands that they sold for 40 aspers apiece: Magno (1499-1472) Evenements historiques en Grèce, 1479-1497, in Sathas, vi, 217. The same provision for 1,000 aspers in the 1446 and 1454 treaties (Babinger, Dölger, 241; Romanin iv, 385).

\textsuperscript{58} Again, a normal provision. For 1403, see Dennis, 79: 12. Item, a lo mio paise et luogi si algun navilio se rompesse, che tuo quello che scapolasse, si haver como persone, sia scapolò e reso. Romanin, iv, 386, for 1454: «chi i par tegnissi de tutto quello fosse scapolato e liberato senza algun impedimento liberamente». Also in the 1446 treaty Babinger, Dölger, 240; Bombaci, Due clausole, 268-269.
THE PEACE TREATY OF 1478

[9] If any Venetian man dies in the lands of my Lordship, without a will or heir, his goods are to be given to the Venetian bailo; if no bailo is found, they will be given into Venetian hands. Venice will write what to do.59

[10] Further, the most illustrious Signoria will have the right and authority specifically to send a bailo to Constantinople, with his household, according to custom, who will be able to dispense justice and administer Venetian affairs, according to their custom.60 The governor will be obligated to give him aid and cooperation.61

[New provisions and conditions for peace]

[11] "per volo dominii": The said bailo who wants to secure his position during this time, is obligated to give my Lordship every year a gift of 10,000 Venetian florins62 from the commercial transactions.63

59 A normal and sensible provision. For the 1454 treaty: Romanin, IV, 386; Dennis, 84, § 6 reports the disappearance of goods valued at 2-3,000 ducats at the death of Ordelaffo Falier.

60 On 22 April 1479, Batista Gritti (1425-1494) q. Homobon q. Triadan, formerly vicereali and then bailo in 1454, was reelected as bailo in April 1479 (asve: Arbori IV, 178; iv: Senate Mar R 11, f. 20v for 22 Apr. 1479). The dates are slightly different in Sanudo, Le Vite, vol. 1, 146, who reports that, beginning on 4 May, four different men including Gritti, were elected to the position, all of whom refused to take it. Gritti was again elected on 25 May, when he finally consented to go.

61 This paragraph is almost identical with that of the 1454 treaty. Romanin, IV, 387. For a history of the position, see C. Coco, F. Manzonetto, Baiti Veneziani alla Sublime Porta. Venice, 1985, esp. 21-26.

62 «Gift»: ναύστια, «little baskets», a Byzantine term for an obligatory gift from the peasants to the landholder: G. Ostrogorsky, Pour l'histoire de la féodalité byzantine, Brussels, 1954, 359-360. The Turks used florins to refer to ducats which had the same value: E. Zachariadou, Trade and Crusade: Venetian Crete and the Emirates of Menteshe and Aydin, Venice, 1983, 141 cites a 1379 agreement between the Doge of Crete and the Emir of Theologo (Ephesos) in which the Doge wrote of 2,000 ducats and the Emir of 2,000 florins.

63 Bayazit II promised a reduction of the annual 10,000 payment to 5,000 on 16 September 1481, confirmed in the ‘χαλδ-ναμ’ of 12 January 1481/1482. Theunissen, 370 ff.; Miklosich, Müller, III, 311, 316: η βασιλείαν μου παρατίθησι τα δυο τσότα κεφάλια… χάρι της ήμων φυλας χορτομαν τα φιλοριας τας καθ' έκαστων χρόνων τεταγμένως εις τόπων δώρων δέκα χιλιάδες, άλλα ότι έκ τοις φιλοριας των τεταγμένων από της έκκαμπτης αυθεντίας της Βενετίας προς την βασιλείαν μου διδόναι καθ' έκαστων χρόνων αι πέντε χιλιάδες έργεμεναι καθ' έκαστων χρόνων προς την βασιλείαν μου εις τόπων δώρων τας άλλας πέντε μετά των πενήντη τρια γυλιάδων των φιλοριαν φέρης". «My Majesty sets aside these two provisions… For the sake of our friendship, I am given the required annual payment of 10,000 florins for the treasury [lit., place of gifts]; but now that 5,000 from the required payment to my dominion each year given by from the most illustrious Signoria of Venice comes each year to my dominion to the treasury, I release the other 5’000] with the 50,000 florins». Bayezid’s remission of the payments was certainly concerned with ensuring Venetian assistance in managing the potential for civil war with his brother, Cem Sultan (Setton, 381-416).
[12] Further, the most illustrious Signoria of Venice is obligated, for every debt lying between us, and for all debts whether common or private or of certain of their men, for all the past time before the war until today, to give to my Lordship 100,000 Venetian ducats within two years. It took two years to pay half the money. The 100,000 was money owed by two Venetian entrepreneurs – Bartolomeo Zorzi and Hieronimo Michiel – for leases on Turkish alum mines (Setton, 328). Bombaci, Nuovi firmani, 314-315, for 23 Mar. 1481 acknowledges payment of 50,000 ducats: «e sepolerano d’essere, apocrisiario e mepalec, doumatia voleteuna chiliaede pentichon da mero doumaton chiliaen… edeguevita meta pericoperis»: «the above-mentioned gentlemen, the ambassador and the baiolo, [have brought] fifty thousand Venetian ducats of the hundred thousand [which] we have received with much appreciation».

[13] Further, the most illustrious Signoria of Venice is obligated to hand over to my Lordship the fortress called Skodra in Albania, except that it may remove the lord who is rettor, and the council, and all the other men who wish to depart, specifically, with their merchandise, if they have any. The Signoria will take the equipment and all other military materiel or whatever is found in the fortress at present without any opposition.

[14] Further, the most illustrious Signoria of Venice is specifically obligated to transfer to my Lordship the island of Lemnos, except that they will take the rettor and the gentlemen, and the other men who want to go will take whatever they have to go wherever they want. Those who want to remain on the island will be pardoned for what they did until now.

Although this has «per volo dominii», the provision was included in the peace proposal delivered by the provveditor of the Fleet, Thomaxio Maripietro more than a year earlier (asve: Secreta, Senato R. 28, f. 60 for 19 Nov. 1477).

The fortress of Skodra (Scutari, Skodar) had twice been under siege by Ottoman forces: the second had lasted since the previous May. It was surrendered to him in March 1479 after the provveditor, Antonio de Leze, received a letter from the Senato which began: «Non dubitamus que ante receptione presentium notitia habueritis de conclusione pacis…» (asve: Secreta, Senato R 28 f. 1490 for 25 Febr. 1478/1479). Two weeks before the peace Mehmed wrote: «bis emici prl toun laibomev ton kastrow ton Skoutarion apo twn eklektrwn osw»: «before this, we will take the castle of Skoutari from your most illustrious [Signoria]» (asve: Documenti Turchi B1/10; also Miklosich, Müller, 294, for 7 Jan. 1478/1479).

LIG 1331/2: «quel zentilhomo che é rettor, le soldati, e tutti altri homini».

Lemnos was captured by Mehmed in 1456, then taken, retaken, and ravaged by both sides for the next 20 years. Its strategic location at the approach to the Hellespont made possession essential: «Επισκέφθηκαν οι Βενετίκοι την Λήμνον και το Σκούταρι δια να κάμουν ασάπην»: «The Venetians gave Lemnos and Skoutari to make peace» (Schreiner, 401).
The above-written provisions are confirmed and ratified and sworn. The present writing was done in the year 6987, the 12th indiction, the 25th of the month of January, in Constantinople.

60 This is essentially the Venetian request to return to the pre-war boundaries. Venice did try to get Manē, part of which had been given them by the Kladas family. ASVE: Secretra, Senato R 28, f. 12v for 8 May 1477: «importantium locorum que minima est existimari vz ... brachium Mayne», but when the provveditori of the Fleet, Thomaxio Maripetro, went to negotiate with Mehmed six months later, he had instructions from the Senato to offer 5,000–10,000 a year to retain Manē (ASVE: Secretra, Senato R 28, f. 60 for 19 Nov. 1477).

61 ASVE: Secretra: Senato R 28, ff. 149-150 for 25 Febr. 1478/1479 directs the Captain-General, Antonio Loredan and provveditori to assist in transferring these territories: «etiam restituuntur omnia loca que sua fuerunt in provincia Amoree et per nos aquisita et occupata fuerunt in soprascritto composito bellis». Also SATHAS, VI, 214 from BCMVE: Codici Cicogn, Ms. 3532, f. 39. Annali Venetii de Stefano Magno (1499-1572).

62 This was a major issue in settling boundaries in the Argolid and Modon-Coron. For the boundary commissions for the Argolid and Giovanni Dario, see note 9, above.
